

Om Malik is founder of GigaOm, with more than 15 years of experience as a journalist covering technology and business news. He was a Writer at Red Herring during its glory days, then went on to be part of the founding team of Forbes.com as a Senior Editor. Most recently, he was a Senior Writer for Business 2.0, covering telecom and broadband stories. His contributions have been published in The Wall Street Journal, The Economist and MIT Technology Review. Additionally, Malik is the author of "Broadbandits: Inside the $750 Billion Telecom Heist." He is also the recipient of many industry awards, including Excellence in Journalism from the Society of Professional Journalists in 2001 and the Gold Award from American Society of Business Publication Editors in 2001.

Steven Levy is senior writer for Wired and before that was chief technology writer and a senior editor for Newsweek. A prominent and respected reporter, he has also had articles published in Harper's, Macworld, The New York Times Magazine, The New Yorker, Premiere, and Rolling Stone. He has won numerous awards, such as the "Computer Press Association Award" for a report he co-wrote in 1998 on the Y2K issue. In 1978, he rediscovered Albert Einstein's brain in the office of the pathologist who removed and preserved it. In 1984, he authored Hackers: Heroes of the Computer Revolution. Levy received his bachelor's degree from Temple University and Masters in literature from Pennsylvania State University. He lives in New York City with his wife, Pulitzer Prize winner Teresa Carpenter, and son.

Connie Guglielmo is a reporter covering technology and tech business news for the San Francisco bureau of Bloomberg News. She covers companies such as Apple, Dell, Hewlett-Packard and Intel. Previously, she worked for Interactive Week and MacWeek, and has also written for Fortune, Upside, Wired, Against All Odds Productions' 24 Hours in Cyberspace, and the Macintosh Bible.

Byron Acohidio is a technology reporter at USA TODAY. Since 2000, he has led cutting-edge coverage of Internet security and cyber crime. In 2006, he took a sabbatical to focus on deeper reporting and co-authored a book called Zero Day Threat: The Shocking Truth of How Banks And Credit Bureaus Help Cyber Crooks Steal Your Money and Identity. Published in 2008, the book has become a must-read primer on the underpinnings of cybercrime. Byron has received numerous awards at USA TODAY and Seattle Times, and also a Pulitzer Prize for beat reporting. Based in Seattle but born and raised in Wahiawa, Hawaii, Byron has been a working journalist since graduating from University of Oregon School of Journalism.

Ben Worthen is a reporter for The Wall Street Journal where he covers the technology industry. He is also the lead writer for WSJ.com's Business Technology Blog, which focuses on the technology businesses use and the people who deploy it. Ben joined the Journal in June 2007 from CIO Magazine, where he was Senior Editor. At CIO, he wrote about how the Internet is changing the way people work, live and do business. He began his career in technology in 1999 as an associate at Forrester Research. In 2007, he won the Neal Award for best news coverage. A Massachusetts native, Ben received his bachelor's degree in American Culture from Vassar College in 1998. He currently lives in San Francisco.

Brad Stone is a correspondent covering Internet trends and consumer technology for The New York Times' San Francisco bureau. In addition, he contributes to the Times' technology blog, Bits. He covers the business and cultural aspects of technology. From 1998 to November 2006, he served as Silicon Valley correspondent for Newsweek Magazine, writing for the technology and business sections and authoring an online column, Plain Text, on our evolving digital lifestyles. Originally from Cleveland, Brad graduated from Columbia University and lives with his wife, Jennifer Granick, and their two daughters.

Matt Marshall is editor and CEO of VentureBeat, covering funding and technology industry news in Silicon Valley and other innovation hubs worldwide. He is also the new Executive Producer of DEMO. Matt previously covered the venture capital beat for the Mercury News, and authored a weekly column called VC Insider as well as a blog called SiliconBeat. He wrote for the Washington Post, contributed to Bayarea.com, and was correspondent for the Wall Street Journal in Bonn, Germany. He then authored a book called The Bank—the Birth of Europe's Central Bank and the Rebirth of European Power. Matt holds a PhD in Government and an MA in German and European Studies from Georgetown University.

Jim Goldman is CNBC's Silicon Valley Bureau Chief. He is responsible for initiating and supervising coverage of business and technology news in Silicon Valley. He previously served at TechTV as Silicon Valley bureau chief where he was named one of the most influential broadcast journalists in the nation. Before that, Jim was national technology correspondent for ABC News' World News Weekend and Good Morning America and was a frequent contributor and guest on the ABC Radio Network. He also worked as a high tech business editor at KICU-TV and began his career at KNTV. Jim has a bachelor's degree in ethics and political journalism and political philosophy from Brown University.

Duffy Jennings has compiled a distinguished career over four decades as a journalist, corporate communications executive, PR consultant and freelance writer. His blog on SFGate.com, "It's News to Me" comments on the media, PR issues, and San Francisco history. Jennings has held senior executive roles with Joint Venture: Silicon Valley Network, the Silicon Valley Leadership Group, internet retailer Fogdog, and the San Francisco Giants. He began his career as a prize-winning reporter and City Hall bureau chief for the San Francisco Chronicle, covering the Zodiac killer, the Moscone-Milk murders and the Patty Hearst case. Veteran actor Adam Goldberg portrayed Duffy's character in the 2007 feature film, "Zodiac." A native San Franciscan, Duffy has a BA in Journalism from San Francisco State University.